“ Mel came into my life at the age of 13, my future husband's daughter. I won't say "stepdaughter." She became part of the family and grabbed a piece of my heart. We went through the adjustment period pretty well I think and survived adolescence as best we could. I knew I would never be like a mother to her and I never thought to try to be. She has a mother that she loved more than anything, who is her best friend, and that is the way it should be. I could only hope to be a friend who never tried to pull any punches with her but gave it to her straight just like she did with everyone. But I know she loved me even through all the ups and downs life threw at us. I just hope she knew how much I loved her. That piece of my heart she grabbed, she took with her when she left us. I will do everything I can Mel, to honor your memory and keep your spirit alive. I will miss you terribly. I love you and I hope you find the peace you struggled to find here. Rest easy angel, spread those wings and fly...

“ Mel Mel, my heart is broken..... You were the life of the party, you could walk into a room and brighten it up. You babysat me all the time growing up, you have influenced me in so many ways and I never got to tell you. When I came home from Australia to NJ in the 5th Grade you helped me with a school project, you drew it out for me and then I cut out all the pieces out and put it together. Thank you for supporting me in my line of work and I'm so happy you found it amazing that I'm doing what I'm doing. You were so talented, so loving and caring. We gained another guardian angel to soon, my chest is aching. I promise you I won't give up and I'll keep going. I love you so much Mel, Rest In Paradise.

“ My earliest memory of Melanie was this cute little curly haired redhead that could have played Anne up on stage. She was always so full of life with a bright smile and chatty personality. Although through her life I was not always a part of things, the times I was in her company she was always warm, polite and friendly. She will be sadly missed by anyone that was blessed to have known her. Love and big hugs Helen, Jennifer and Samantha. My heart breaks for you all ❤️
